Market Review

For fixed income, the global bond market suffered a sell-off in reaction to the surprise victory of Donald Trump in the US presidential election. The US Treasury yield curve steepened on concern over the expansionary fiscal policy and inflationary pressure. The Malaysian bond market was not spared, as risk-off sentiment sparked a selloff by both local and offshore investors amid thin liquidity. As a result, the ringgit weakened by 6.5% in the month to MYR4.466. In the last Monetary Policy Committee meeting of the year, Bank Negara kept the overnight policy rate unchanged at 3.00%, citing the current monetary accommodativeness is consistent with its policy stance.

For equity, November was a negative month for the Malaysian market as emerging markets and their currencies fell out of favour following Donald Trump's victory in the US Presidential Election. The FBM100 Index was down by 3.5%, underperforming MSCI Asia ex-Japan Index, which was up by 3.3% in MYR terms. Given the President-elect's plan to invest US$1 trillion over 10 years to rebuild America's infrastructure, the market is expecting faster US economic growth, stronger equity market and pickup in inflation going forward. Hence, global investors sold bonds and emerging market assets and piled their money into US equities, which hit multiple all-time highs.

On the foreign front, MSCI Asia ex Japan declined by 2.9% in USD terms due to foreign funds outflow following Donald Trump's surprise victory. Concerns over growth prospects in emerging economies have heightened while rising inflation expectations in the US could result in the Federal Reserve raising interest rate faster and steeper than expected. All these factors resulted in rising risk premiums in emerging markets and, hence, drove foreign investors away.

Market Outlook

For fixed income, global investors may adjust the position of their portfolio in emerging markets in view of US president-elect Donald Trump's pro-growth policy. Looking ahead, uncertainties surrounding Trump's policies, major central bank policies and European politics are likely to affect Ringgit and the local bond market sentiment.

For equity, the market is expected to remain volatile following the surprise victory of Donald Trump. In his election campaign, he has proposed to implement policies to boost the US economy and protectionist measures on trade. All the proposed measures, if implemented fully, are likely to result in higher inflation, lower growth for other countries, higher interest rates and a stronger USD. These could cause further capital outflows from emerging markets. Investors are expected to stay cautious until there are clearer signs of the President-elect's policies when he comes into office.
